

VETA

Translucency and the manipulation of sheer fabric hides yet reveals the body, the ultimate basis for this collection. Repeating architectural lines and the interplay of light and dark further influenced these looks. Pleated organza interacts with solid ground to create different layers and textures. These lines travel down or across the body, causing the eye to move throughout the pieces. The young woman of this collection enjoys layering and creating interesting combinations through the mixture of different silhouettes and fabrics. The various garments can be mixed and matched as one pleases, revealing yet concealing.

Polyester organza adds an airiness to the collection that juxtaposes hard ground. The pleats create a structural feel that stand off the body and produce negative space. The eye moves between reality and illusion. Other fabrics include polyester silk jersey, stretch rayon twill, and neoprene. These four fabrics work together to hug the body and yet stand away from it. Translucent blacks and dusty pinks combine with greys and steel blues to create a fresh juniors line. The push and pull of young adulthood translates to the fluidity and solidarity of these looks.
